

Kite day chance for kids to fly

LAST Wednesday was a beautiful day for flying kites. And the children of Glenroy's Yooralla Early Childhood Intervention Centre made good use of it.

To mark Early Childhood Intervention Week, more than 20 students, parents and staff came together to make and fly kites.

Glenroy program co-ordinator Gayle

Blayney said the aim of Early Childhood Intervention Week was to heighten the community's awareness of the variety of services available to support children with disabilities or development delays.

"Children are learning to cope with their disabilities and find out about their abilities," she said.

"They develop a sense of empathy and curiosity, a feeling of connection to others and the ability to relate and communicate.

"We aim to help the children to develop their educational, physical and social abilities."

Carla joined other children in making and flying kites.